Time-management is important, and some bands are terrible for that – so I hear! Mark: Major labels don't seem to be very good at developing artists, so it's down to the manager to do the hard work and this takes time. Don't rush things. Using service providers like Kobalt is the best way to develop artists. It takes more work for my ...

Management determines an artist's schedule for the coming year, dedicating certain periods to shows in specific regions. This is done in accordance with the head agent. The agents, in turn, have to fill in these periods with shows. So the head-agenda might dictate a Europe tour in March, Canada in June, the US in July – August and then Asia leading up to Australia + NZ towards New Years. The primary agent or manager will then coordinate these dates to all the sub-agents.

Personal Skill: Although theoretical base may be same for every artist, but each one has his own style and approach towards his job. That is why the level of success and quality of performance differs from one person to another. E.g. there are several qualified painters but M.F. Hussain is recognized for his style. Similarly management as an art is also personalized. Every manager has his own ...

An artist manager, also known as a "band manager," is in charge of the business side of being in a band. Often, band members are great at the creative side of things but aren't so great at promoting themselves, booking their own gigs, or negotiating deals. In a very general sense, the task of a manager is to take care of the day to day running of the band's career so that the band can focus on ...
