Fortunately wingless wasps that look like ants don't figure in the statistics. Most people are unable to tell a 'wasp' from a 'bee'. A few can identify a bumblebee (there are several kinds), and only the most studious could distinguish a 'paper wasp' (either of them) from one of the vespulae. Many claim not to have seen what 'bit' them in any case. In some respects the venoms ...

How the bee got its sting. There was once a fly who liked flowers. He didn't know WHY he liked flowers, but they fascinated him. All he wanted to do, all day, was to be as close to flowers as he could – to see them, to listen to them rustle in the wind, to smell their fragrance. "Oh, how good it is to be free, with nothing to do but smell the flowers!" the fly would exclaim, to no one ...

The Important Worker Bee. Workers, as their name implies, do most of the "work" around the hive. They secrete wax from glands on the abdomen and fashion the honeycomb and broodcomb from it. This comb contains hexagonal cells large enough to hold a developing worker or drone, a small quantity of honey, or pollen. When the cells are filled with honey, pollen, or a pupa, a worker caps the cell ...
