Shawn Inmon hails from Mossyrock, Washington--the setting for his first two full-length books, Feels Like the First Time and Both Sides Now. By day he works in real estate with a side of public speaking; prior to that, he has DJed, sold stuff that you definitely wanted, cooked your hamburgers, fished for crabs in the Aleutian Sea, bought for department stores, and done business consulting. He is married to his high school sweetheart, Dawn, who co-authored Both Sides Now with him. He is a ...

Both Sides Now is the follow-up to Feels Like the First Time and is told through Dawn's perspective of a long and tragic courtship that "ends" in a relationship that has been strengthened much like a forged weapon battered by a blacksmith's hand. I haven't read the first book, and I don't feel like I needed to have read it before this one since there is a full story in here.

I didn't discover until tonight that you wrote Both Sides Now on March 9, 1967, at the age of 21. I have always really like this song for some reason. I knew I heard it when I was very young but didn't realize perhaps another year I might have been drawn to it: we came into this world at the same time. Hard to believe we'll both be 47 years old and Joni will be Best wishes for many more.
