Ethan Blue's Doing Time in the Depression makes clear that a stretch in San Quentin would be the sure result of such an encounter. Once there, Joad would join a rapidly growing population of new migrants. Blue begins his book by documenting how mobility shaped growing prison populations. Poor whites from Texas and the Dust Bowl region accounted for much of the increase in California's prison population; Texas's prisons were filled with state residents recently arrived in its cities. This ...

-- George Lipsitz * Australasian Journal of American Studies * Ethan Blue presents such a dose of western scholarship in his complex and stark publication Doing Time in the Depression. Melding the U.S. borderlands, racial hierarchies, immigration politics, prison economies, and gender constructions, Blue builds a devastating study that illuminates a violence far removed from the invented western 'valor and daring' or 'glory and victory' favored by scriptwriters and novelists. * The Western ...
