In Upson's fourth Josephine Tey mystery, starring the real-life mystery author, the lead character is less sleuth than featured player. To celebrate her fortieth birthday in 1936, Tey, along with her good friend Scotland Yard Chief Inspector Archie Penrose, goes to the fairytale-like Welsh resort of Portmeirion at the same time Alfred Hitchcock and his film company are there. Here Tey meets Alma Reville, Hitch's wife, and agrees to the filming of her novel A Shilling for ...

In "Fear in the Sunlight," Upson has designed a plot around Alfred Hitchcock and his movie crew, based on the fact that Hitchcock did indeed film one of Tey's mysteries. The details of Upson's plot, however, are so convoluted that no solution could have been satisfying. There is just too much going on, with too many people hating each other and wishing each other ill. Intricate plots are fine, but they need an ultimately simple resolution--this one didn't work for me. Nevertheless ...
