Gödel was a complex person so any effort to draw him simply is welcomed. He stands tall in that fuzzy area between genius and madness. For example, he proved that any consistent system (with no contradictions) is incomplete (e.g. mathematics relies on axioms that cannot be verified with mathematics) but died of self-starvation struggling with paranoia.

That's what makes great television: your talent, unrestrained. As live production moves into the all-digital universe, some tech providers make their tools so feature-rich that they overwhelm the machines they run on. That's what you don't want in live TV. And it's not what we do. The minds at SimplyLive are not new to the live production industry. Our founders created products ...
